

Abstract

A method and apparatus are provided for reducing delivery time latency in data transferred between a packet data service network and mobile data device. The method includes the steps of detecting an indicia of bandwidth needed for information to be transferred from the packet data service network to the mobile data device, comparing an attribute of the indicia with a predetermined criteria and notifying a wireless interface controller servicing the wireless data device when the attribute of the data block exceeds the predetermined file criteria.